Agenda

01

Overview & Creative Brief

The objective, the audience, and the One Thing

02

Persona

Who we are really talking to

03

Design Planning

The look, tone, and rules that hold it together

04

The Campaign

Five media forms, built for our personas

The Challenge

Make Tootsie top-of-mind

Move from a candy people only remember at Halloween to a first-choice brand.

Promote brand & flavor innovation

Tell people the fruit and sour flavors they crave already exist.

Connect across generations

Win the Gen Z craver and the parent who fills the candy bowl.

The Brief

The Creative Brief

Objective

Help Tootsie reach top-of-mind status while staying authentic to the brand.

They think now

Tootsie is a classic, original-flavor candy — not their first choice.

Why believe it

It's true — the fruit and sour lines already exist; marketing just never said so.

Audience

Gen Z snack-lovers and the parents & teachers who buy for the kids.

We want them to think

Tootsie has every flavor, size, and format they crave.

The One Thing

Tootsie Covers It All — literally, and through humor.

Tootsie®

The Big Idea

COVERS IT ALL

Make consumers remember what they loved — and discover what they'll love next.

Tootsie®

For the first time in 50 years,
Mr. Owl tries something new.

Our running gag turns a product-line expansion into a punchline.

What the Work Stands On

Brand authenticity

Stay true to the Tootsie people already trust — heritage palette, Mr. Owl, the unwrapping ritual.

Incorporating nostalgia

Use the cultural memory consumers already own as the hook for everything new.

Showcasing flavor innovation

Put the fruit and sour lines front and center — the news inside the nostalgia.

Main Ideas

- 1 Tootsie is not currently top of mind.
- 2 Tootsie is not well known for its non-chocolate treats.
- 3 Keep the same nostalgic vibe — but show the new flavors.
- 4 Target Gen Z and cater to their current interests.

Madison

Age 22 · Graduate Student

Madison, 22

Graduate Student

About

- Always carries snacks
- Heavy online presence
- Loves trying new, viral snacks

Pain point: Wants newer candy — and thinks Tootsie only makes the classics.

Sarah

Age 32 · Elementary Teacher

Sarah, 32

Elementary Teacher

About

- Shops for family treats
- Tootsie was her childhood
- Influences children's candy preferences

Pain point: The kids want the newest trends — she doesn't know Tootsie already makes them.

Design Planning

A moodboard that keeps every piece of the campaign visually unified.

Tone

Funny and excited — a classic product with a fun twist.

Design principles

Repetition of Mr. Owl and “Covers It All”; bright new flavors set against the muted heritage palette.

Typography

Libre Baskerville, Regular and Bold, used consistently across the campaign.

Campaign

The Campaign: Five Media Forms

Each form chosen for where Madison and Sarah actually spend attention — social leads as the main channel.

Social Media

TikTok + Instagram: the “How Many Licks?” reboot, the #TootsieSourFace challenge, and a “Pick Your Craving” carousel.

Connected TV

“Then & Now” hero spot, a “Mr. Owl Tries Sour” bumper, and a 6-second non-skippable punchline.

Out-of-Home

Highway bulletins, bus king-wraps, and digital screens near grocery and mall entrances.

Retail / POP

Checkout end-caps, shelf-talkers and wobblers, and a Halloween variety-bag display.

Digital Display

Expandable rich-media banners, an interactive “Spin the Flavor” unit, and a retargeting banner set.

Execution & Strategy

Build the hype

Launch around new products and flavor innovation, flighted to peak before Halloween.

Spread by word of mouth

Reach younger audiences through creators and UGC — Madison shares, her followers follow.

Social-first communication

Use social media as the main channel, supported by CTV, OOH, retail, and display.

The new lineup

Fruit, Berry & Sour — already made, finally marketed.

Why It Wins

“Tootsie Covers It All” solves both personas at once. Madison gets the bold, shareable fruit and sour flavors she’s been craving; Sarah gets one trusted brand that satisfies the whole family in a single trip. The running gag — Mr. Owl finally trying something new — turns a flavor launch into a punchline people want to share, and nostalgia-plus-new-flavor is the leading growth driver in confectionery right now.

Tootsie moves from a Halloween afterthought to top-of-mind —
across generations.
